Young Men Bent Upon Joy

William Cairns and James Woolsey, two East Side young men, decided last night that a joy ride in a covered buggy would be to their liking, and so they prepared a scheme by which they thought that they could get a rig from L. B. Sterling, the East Side liveryman. *First they entered a drug store and 'phoned to Mr. Sterling that C. S. Bames, the plumber of 147 Willis Place, wanted a single carriage and would send a man at once. When Cairns arrived at the stable Mr. Sterling's suspicion was aroused and he told the young man that he would have to get a written order from Mr. Eames, Cairns said he would get it, and re-

INDICTED BROKER TO TELL JEROME STORY OF THEFT

(Special from United Press.)
New York, Aug. 17.—That Donald L. Persch, the young note broker, who with Broker A. D. S. Adams, of Boston, was indicted by the Grand Jury for selling $110,000 worth of collateral of F. Augustus Heinze, will go before District Attorney Jerome to-morrow and tell the whole story of the alleged gigantic conspiracy, was indicated to-day when Persch was arraigned before Justice Mulqueen to plead.

Former Assistant District Attorney John F. McIntyre, Persch's attorney, asked for a smaller bond than $50,000 but Jerome objected and Justice Mulqueen refused to reduce the ball whereupon, at McIntyre's request, Persch's arraignment was postponed until next Monday.

Jerome and McIntyre both intimated that Persch was now willing to reveal all he knows about the alleged mammoth theft plot and that he will go to Jerome's office to-morrow prepared to tell all. Jerome is now awaiting word from Boston of Adams' arrest there.

one commendable attribute—his love for a dog.

Such is the theme of "The Regeneration," dramatized from the autobiography of Owen Kildare, "My Mamie Rose."

The story of a man who at the age of thirty was absolutely liliterate, ignorant of the existence of elemental refinement and earning a dubious livelihood by trickery, crime and the manipulation of his muscles, transformed by the influence of a good woman into gentleman, capable within a brier period of occupying a position in respectable society—the tragedies of a truth surpassing fiction are to be found in this powerful play. The author reveals not only the phases of the lower life in a metropolitan city, but concomitant thereto the deprayed instincts of the wealthy class who seek amusements in the babitat of rough characters under conditions that no woman of refinement would countenance for a moment.

The metamorphosis of Owen Conway demonstrates the contention that the inherent tendency—however modified or mutilated by circumstance—is capable of revivification under the influence of the requisite medium. For Owen's mother was a gentlewoman—his father a man of honor and ability. In their son, left when an infant to the mercies of the streets, knowing for years only the lower strata of humanity, heredity triumphs over environment when the cumbersome accumulations of the latter are disturb-

Alfred took a trolley to New Haven and absorbed a quantity of stimulants in order to keep out the chilling effects of the weather. Thinking to go back to Cheshire he boarded a trolley car in the afternoon and found himself in this city. While riding on a Beasteley Park car he turned to Officer Brown who was sitting beside him and asked him the way to Cheshire. When told that he was in Bridgeport, he mumbled something to himself and went inside the car, where he began to disrobe. He was taken to police headquarters. This morning Judge Wilder suspended sentence and he is now on his way to Cheshire.

Those saved from the wrecked ship were Captain I. I. Small, who refused to leave his ship and had to be lashed by the life savers and taken off by force; First Mate Davis; James Brown, a 15 year old cabin boy; a cook and four sailors.

Davis was on watch when the ship went ashore. He mistook the lights of the Nashua Hotel for those of an Atlantic liner and steered toward them. When he discovered his mistake, he called the captain and it was then discovered that the steering wheel was out of order and the ship, with all sails set, sped before the gale into the shore. The waves began washing over the deck and the captain and crew were forced into the bow and then onto the bowsprit to save themselves.
